The Brockport, New York DEMOCRAT, until now Democratic in its sympathies and utterances, has put the names of Grant and Wilson at the head of its columns. Mr. Brigham, its editor, in explainning the course he has taken,

"The time has come when every honest and independent Democrat must of Eastward and act for himself. The convention recently assembled at Baltimore presents to us the humiliating spectacle of a party without party principles, without a leader, without anything tangible upon which to hang a faith-in fact the mere > ghost of a once great party." After reviewing the Cincinnati and Philadelphia platforms the Democrat continues:

"So much for the platforms. And now, between the Republican candidates before the people, we have no hesitancy in pronouncing for Grant. As the sucsessful leaders of the northern armies during the late war, he challenges our hood that child would reward his paradmiration; as chief administrator of the laws of the Nation, he commands our respect and confidence. That the administration of President Grant has been entirely free from mistakes, not even his most zealous supporters will affirm. He himself says: 'My past experience may guide me in avoiding the mistakes, ineviteble with novices in all professions." But that his administration has on the whole been successful-far more so than it gave promise to in '69,' no candid man will deny."
